Tate Publishing Enterprises, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 173 x 124 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . My son was my first real love. The moment I felt him move inside me, was the moment I knew I was blessed by a gift from God. After his birth, I would never let him leave my sight. When he was two, we decided to grow our family. I was able to share the joy of expectancy with my son. We would talk and sing to my belly. After the birth of my daughter, life was more enjoyable. Now I had two little ones to care for, to love, and I knew both of them loved me back in ways I had never experienced before. For the first time in my life, I was complete. All my needs were being met by being a mom. Daneah Lancaster had the perfect family as a wife and mother of two. She was content and complete. But within a short amount of time she was divorced, trying to support her children on her own. To soften the pain of their absence when they were visiting their father, she started spending time at the bar. When this proved less than soothing, she turned to illicit drugs, which provided a greater numbness to her situation. Sacrifice: The Road to Belief portrays the destruction wrought by these substances and the tremendous struggle Daneah endured to overcome her grief and addictions. This heartfelt memoir will inspire you in your own journey. Identify the stages of grief and depression in your own life so you can work through them to overcome their power. Sacrifice: The Road to Belief thoughtfully speaks to a mother s longing and the joy found through discovering a...
