Excerpt: . . . it possible that, in an acquaintance of three days, you should have observed as many disagreeable qualities as any one else could have discovered in twice the number of years You do me as much injustice as you suppose me to be guilty of towards Mrs. MKay. All the qualities, good or bad-- Nay, you have not mentioned one good All the qualities, then, that I have enumerated, are either what I observed myself, or what must, infallibly, be the companions of such. In short, I have not the least doubt that your new relation will make you perfectly miserable, unless--- I am delighted you have a remedy to propose! Unless you will condescend to listen to a proposal from your excellent friend, Inver-. craig; which is simply this--that you will permit him to offer you a home where his greatest study will be to...
